by Dakota

The Apaches lived in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma. Many of them still do. The Apaches celebrated with Pow Wows. The Apaches made their homes out of huge sticks. They hunted rabbits, fish, and bucks. The Apaches wore buck skins dresses and for the men, white cotton tunics. They take the buck's skin and make it into a dress. The Apaches made a whole bunch of tools to sew and make stuff. The Apaches spoke Apache and English. They hunted a lot during the hot days. Geronimo was one of the warriors who were so brave. Mangas, Coloradas, and Victorio were also very brave. Apache means enemy. There are thirteen different Apache tribes in the United States today. Almost all Apache people speak English today. They do the same thing all the children do; play with each other, go to school, and help around the house. Besides cooking for their families, Apache women built new houses for their families every time the tribes moved to a new location.
