

Inuit by Victoria

The Inuit refers to the people formerly called Eskimos.

Where did they live? Where do the people live today? Their homeland stretches from the northeastern tip of Russia across Alaska and northern Canada to parts of Greenland.

What did they eat? They ate fish, seals, and whales. They hunted caribou, polar bear, and other small animals.

What did they wear? They wore warm clothes made of fur. They were made of fur from birds, bears, and caribou.

What kind of homes did they build? Their homes were made of stone and earth. Whale ribs sometimes supported the roof. Igloos were made from snow and ice.

Interesting facts:

1. I learned that the Inuit people live in the coldest regions of the world.
2. The communities of the Inuit people range from a couple of people to thousands of people.
3. The Inuit speak a language called Inuktitut or their native language (English, Russian, Canadian).
4. The Inuit preferred the fur of the caribou.
5. I learned their boots are called kamiks.
