The Sioux were buffalo hunters. The buffalos were used for many things like tipis, clothing, food, and strings for bows, bags, dolls and lots of other things. Below are some pictures of cloths and a tipi. Men use their creative skills to paint pictures of their selves hunting buffalo on their tipis.

When the men are hunting the boys aren't aloud to hunt with them because of the danger. But the boys do hunt on colts behind the men where the calves are. A boy should kill a calf by ten years old, but that doesn't always happen.

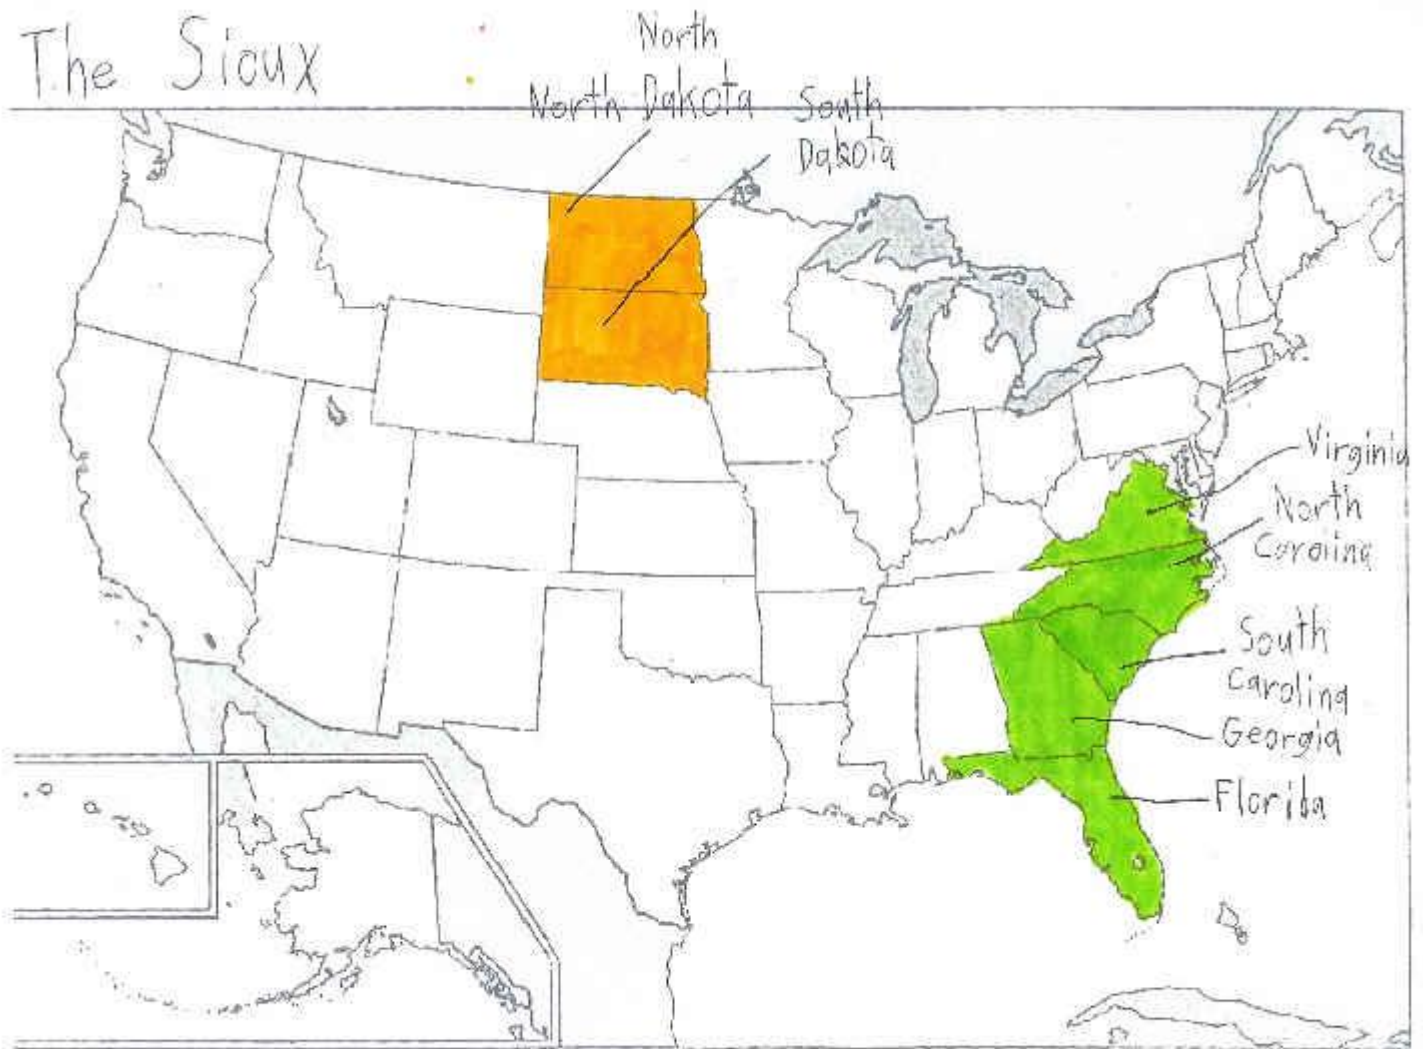

The Sioux believed the Wakan Tanka (wahkahn tankah), or the Great Spirit had control over all things. Everything, including stones, animals, clouds, and trees had a soul or spirit. The sun had great supremacy because it gave brilliance and heat. The earth was the mother of every soul. The Sioux revered the spirits every day.
