The Cherokee people had two different kinds of houses. One was for summer and the other was for winter. The summer house was big; it had about four windows and a small hole at the top for smoke to get out. And the winter house was smaller to keep them warmer. There were not any windows and a very small door that people had to crawl under and it was dome shaped and made out of mud. Cherokee ate many things like buffalo, elk, frog, bear, plums, grapes, berries, nuts, and wild potatoes and corn. They used every part of the animal. They used their skin for clothes and some bones for tools. The Cherokee barely wasted anything. They used arrowheads and bow and arrows for tools. The Cherokee believed in spirits who created the earth, sun, moon, and stars. They thought things like sun, eagle, crystal, fire, number seven, the moon, and the rattlesnake were all sacred. They had priests and they used herbs to make medicines and crystals in sacred ceremonies. Yowa was their God.
